

Professor James Ballard has an audacious dream: to build a telescope powerful enough to find civilizations on planets orbiting faraway stars. It could be the greatest discovery in history, irrefutable evidence of alien life. But exploration for exploration's sake doesn't come cheap, if it happens at all. The pursuit of science and knowledge will have to overcome a cost that can't be measured in dollars for Professor Ballard's dream to come true.

Flybys and Foci

```

;Last modified:      11/17/15
;
;Author:              Timothy Liu

InitSerial          PROC    NEAR
                   PUBLIC  InitSerial

InitSerialStart:    ;start
                   ;save
                   PUSH    AX
                   PUSH    BX
                   PUSH    DX

InitSerialSetBaud:  ;first
                   ;load
                   MOV     BX, StartBaudRate
                   CALL    SetBaudRate
                   ;call

InitSerialLineControl: ;start
                   ;calcul
                   MOV     DX, SerialAddress + LineControlOffs
                   MOV     AL, LineControlStart
                   OUT     DX, AL

```